

Amanda Mosek

Amanda's early career was in international banking before moving into the Further Education sector where she worked for thirty years. She started as a lecturer in business and professional studies and finished as the Principal and Chief Executive of Boston College, a role she held for six years. She has worked at a number of East Midlands colleges including a period at Grantham College where she was Deputy Principal. She has a degree in Business, Marketing and Economics and a Masters in Educational Leadership gained at the University of Nottingham. Amanda has lived in Grantham for ten years and is married with two grown up children and a grandson. She is passionate about the ability of Further Education to transform lives and is delighted to be taking up the role of Chair of Governors at Grantham College.
